

As one who used to be barraged daily until late in the evening by unsolicited telemarketers, even having lengthy annoying messages left on my answering machine, I greatly appreciate the strict "Do Not Call" stance taken by New Jersey. Instead of the FCC weakening this legislation, steps should be taken to implement this throughout the whole nation.

Why should private citizens be forced to have our personal lives interrupted on a regular basis by pushy sales personnel? This is not fair. Those people who enjoy receiving these types of calls can continue to accept them by not being on the "Do Not Call" list. But don't make the rest of us suffer through this by an unwelcome invasion of our privacy. Thank-you.
